Read the following passage then answer the questions:

Forms of football have been played for thousands of years by various civilizations. As far back as 2500 B.C.E., the Chinese played a form of the game called Tsu Chu. The natives of the Pacific Islands played the game using their hands and feet, and they used coconuts and animal bladders as balls. The Inuits of northern Canada played football on ice and used balls filled with caribou hair and grass. Other Native Americans played on fields that had enough space for 1,000 players to be playing at the same time, and matches usually lasted for more than one day. The games were so rough that the players often got broken bones. In Mexico and Central America, people invented the rubber ball and played in courts 40 to 50 feet (12 to 15 meters) long surrounded by walls several feet high. In the middle of each wall, there was a stone with a hole in the middle or a wooden ring, and the idea was for players to hit the hard rubber ball through the hole or ring. But it was not until 1863 in England that the first set of rules was put together to make football the game it is today. Football was spread throughout the world by British sailors and settlers, and all major innovations in the game such as leagues, professionalism, and international matches originated in England.

Q2: Reading (9 marks)

Healthy habits are important for students because they help them stay strong and do well in school. Eating nutritious food like fruit, vegetables, and whole grains gives the body energy it needs to stay active. Exercising regularly, even by doing simple activities such as walking or stretching, helps students feel better and reduces stress. Another important habit is getting enough sleep. Students who sleep 8–9 hours each night are usually more alert, can remember information more easily, and perform better in their classes. When students follow healthy habits, they improve both their physical and mental well-being.
